"understanding behavior from 'the student's perspective'..."

Addressing severe challenging behaviors (e.g., aggression, self-injury, environmental destruction), can be confusing and frustrating. This workshop will describe practical strategies for addressing complex challenging behaviors. Understanding behavior from "the student's perspective" consistently leads to more effective management. The session will describe methods which have been demonstrated effective for all students, even for students with significant developmental disabilities or for students who are functionally non-verbal.

ABOUT THE PRESENTER

Dr. Flint Simonsen is an Associate Professor in the School of Education at Whitworth University. He earned his BS at Eastern Washington University, his MS at Northeastern University, and his PhD at the University of Oregon. He has worked extensively with over 200 schools across the State of Washington in their efforts to implement School-wide Positive Behavior Support.
